New look on development aims

(summary)

The rationalization of socioeconomic development in the future needs a new interpretation of this complex process and a redefinition of its purposes. The relative weight of the quantity changes and especially the output value accretion measured in classic GDP categories, will be lesser and lesser. The author proposes a broaden socioeconomic progress measure, more adequate to the heart of the matter – the Integrated Welfare Index. There should be appreciated also: the free time, the environment, and the factors associated with the govern quality, culture condition, and the society subjective estimations.
