

TOWARDS A RELEVANT DEVELOPMENT POLICY RESEARCH AGENDA

By Carlos A. Magariños

(Abstract)

Have the lessons of the recent development experience and progress in development thinking been duly taken on board by the policy prescriptions currently offered to developing countries and countries with economies in transition? The answer is probably not, particularly in the case of the least developing countries. The paper addresses the reasons why this is so and to do about it.